Lyman Unveils New Secret Weapons In Gun Care

Lyman's Universal Cleaning Rod System covers all handguns and rifles with rods in various lengths and calibers that thread into the ergonomic swivel handle. Machined from spring steel with a tough, non-abrasive proprietary epoxy coating, the rods and the handle are chemical resistant. They are threaded to mount standard 8-32 jags and brushes like those in Lyman's new 26 Piece Complete Jag and Brush Set.

The 26 Piece Jag and Brush Set keeps your bore cleaning necessities protected and organized in a durable, hinged storage container. Containing 26 pieces organized by caliber, this set has slots for each jag and brush from .17 to .45 calibers.

The Universal Bore Guide Set protects both the chamber and the bore from abrasion by centering your cleaning rod and jag through the chamber. This set fits most bolt actions and includes a special adapter sleeve for the AR-15. It covers bore sizes from .17 up to .416, and has a specially machined port to make applying solvent easier and neater.

For Love of the Range

As a boy, the first handgun I fell in love with was my dad's Colt Combat Commander that he'd bought off an old retired sheriff. It's hard to say why that gun captured my imagination the way it did, but since then I've had a thing for the 1911 and the unique way it has become a symbol of 20th century Americana.

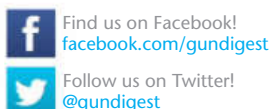

For this issue, I had the opportunity to review Turnbull's new 1911 Heritage Edition Commander, which as you'll see on page 10 is both a workhorse and a work of art. Doug Turnbull's newest introduction is a masterful, fresh take on a proven classic. But as Doug himself told me, great guns are meant to be shot. I thought about that as I loaded the truck for the range, my son tailing my every move as he begged to go. I suddenly realized how much my early experiences at the range with my dad shaped me, and decided to bring my son along. He talked joyously about it for days afterward. Hand-drawn pictures of Turnbull's 1911, now part of our shared heritage, grace his bedroom walls.

Great guns are meant to be shot. It's a simple yet profound statement that applies directly to this issue, which focuses on shooting skills. Sure, guns are great to talk about, ogle over and debate, but ultimately our shooting heritage grows as we participate in it and help others do the same. The passion is fueled not merely by talk, but by time spent at the range, at a training course or out in the field chasing game.

A current Gunsite instructor and former SWAT team member, Bob Whaley talks about the importance of training and how to get the most out of your next training course (page 16). David Hart rounds up the essential gear for gun cleaning (page 30), while managing editor Drew Warden walks you through some must-have new range gear for 2015 (page 20) and the NSSF's "Where to Shoot" app (page 82).

Read. Enjoy. Be inspired. And get to the range!

Quick Shot: Swarovski X5

Paired with an H-S Precision rifle, Swarovski's new X5 scope is a master of the long, open range. Prairie dogs at 800 yards? Not a problem.

New for 2015, Swarovski Optik introduced its long-range X5 scope, which comes in both an illuminated and non-illuminated version, as well as $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ MOA models. The X5 is built upon Swarovski's new spring retention system, with twin turrets for elevation and windage, as well as a SubZero function that allows shooters to engage targets closer than the zeroed-in range (10 MOA down from zero). The spring retention system exerts equal pressure on both turrets regardless of position, which provides maximal accuracy shot after shot.

I had the opportunity to field test the new X5 3.5-18x50 $\frac{1}{4}$ MOA in South Dakota this summer along with H-S Precision rifles. Paired with a custom rifle from H-S chambered in 6.5 Creedmoor—and more than a little help from my spotter, Josh—I was able to knock down a prairie dog at 803 yards. I barely missed an opportunity at just past 1,100 yards before the rain set in, but the X5 impressed nonetheless.

Used in conjunction with Swarovski's ballistic app and STR 80 spotting scope with MOA reticle, it was incredibly easy to get the X5 dialed in, even out to extreme ranges. Whether you're engaging targets at 120 or 1,100 yards, the X5 adjusts quickly and retains phenomenal accuracy. The X5 should be available this fall. GDTM

Turnbull's new 1911 Heritage Edition Commander is a masterpiece that weds restoration-grade artisanship with new gun production.

COMMAND & CONQUER

For decades, Doug Turnbull has built a lasting reputation as the premiere gun restoration master. His New York-based company, Turnbull Restoration & Manufacturing Co., has turned thousands of worn and tattered relics into gallery-worthy works of art, many christened with the color case-hardening, exquisite engraving and charcoal bluing that's become synonymous with the company name. He didn't invent these techniques—he just perfected them.

Turnbull's newest introduction, the Model 1911 Heritage Edition Commander, demonstrates what can be accomplished when the mindset of the restoration process is applied to the production of a new firearm. The Commander, which will be featured at the 2016 SHOT Show, is a follow up to the original Heritage full-size 1911, introduced in 2014. As Turnbull himself said, it's all about attention to detail.

"The idea with the [Model 1911] Heritage Edition was to take the heritage of the old guns, with the historical finishes, the color case-hardening and the charcoal bluing, and bring that into new manufacturing," Turnbull said. "The result is a work of art."

Gallery worthy it is, but range weariness it is not.

"That's probably one of the things we hear most, 'That gun is too pretty to shoot,'" Turnbull said. "But we always tell people, 'These guns are works of art, yes, but they're meant to be shot. Shoot it. Enjoy it. They're meant to be used.' Once people do shoot the gun, they're impressed. It's not just for looks."

Built for Looks, Built to Last

As good as it looks—and yes, it looks damn fine—the Heritage Edition Commander is, as Turnbull said, made to shoot. The gun features a forged frame and slide and is CNC machined to meet the strictest specifications and tolerances. All parts are fit by hand, tested, hand polished and feature roll marking, charcoal bluing and color case-hardening. With an expert engraver on staff, Turnbull also offers customized engraving for those so desiring.

The Commander also features Novak dovetail-style, white three-dot sights and double diamond American black walnut checkered grips. The solid one-piece trigger is set between 4 and 5 pounds and, as range testing verified, makes for a highly accurate and enjoyable handgun to shoot.

In hand, the Heritage Commander has the smooth, ergonomic feel of a custom gun, matching the elegant look of a masterpiece. The thumb safety is easily engaged or disengaged without the need for multiple fingers and a hernia-grade effort, and the slide functions like an already broken-in gun. Disassembly is a cinch thanks to the hand-fit parts. The gun ships with a nice Turnbull case and a pair of two-tone magazines.

At the range, the Commander was tested with three different loads from HPR: the 230-grain jacketed hollow point (JHP), 185-grain JHP, and the 150-grain Black Ops open tip frangible (OTF). Testing was conducted at 25 yards from sandbags. Group averages were taken from five-shot groups. There were no functionality issues with the handgun, which has a price tag of $2,850. The best overall test group was 1.74 inches from the 185-grain JHP, which also averaged 3.33-inch groups overall. The 230-grain JHP had a best group of 2.5 inches and an average of 3.17 inches. The lighter 150-grain OTF produced a best group of 3.28 inches and an average of 4.06 inches.

Parting Shots

The first handgun I fell in love with as a kid was my dad's Colt Combat Commander that he'd bought off an old retired sheriff. Since then, I've had a thing for the 1911. Turnbull's Heritage Edition Commander is the epitome of everything good about the 1911. It's elegantly designed, artistically crafted and functionally flawless. It's as accurate as it is beautiful, and it embraces the rich tradition of the old while putting forth something breathtakingly new. Simply put, it's the kind of gun you can't stop staring at...and can't stop shooting. GDTM

Train & Defend

One expert shows you how to get the most out of your training.

BOB WHALEY

The United States of America is unique in many ways. One aspect in particular is the basic tenant that we as individuals possess certain God given rights. The government does not grant these rights; they are endowed by our creator. One of those rights is the individual right to self protection and ownership of the equipment to accomplish said task. That's pretty heady stuff. I propose that in exercising that right, we take on an equally awesome responsibility. We literally hold the power of life and death in our hands. Part of that responsibility is to prepare and train to the limit of our ability so that if the flag ever goes up, we can execute our right to self defense with precision and excellence.

I'll be the first to admit that I'm a training junkie. It started when I was fourteen years old and decided to become a police officer. I walked into a martial arts dojo because I knew the ability to physically control someone was an essential skill, and the rest is history. I was a law enforcement officer for 31 years, 15 of which were spent with my department's full-time SWAT team. I knew the basic training I received in the academy was limited, and the department could not/would not pay for all the training I needed. So I started learning basic weapons skills, then patrol-related skills.

Once I was in SWAT, the target of training switched to specific skills related to police special operations. When I retired, my training emphasis adjusted once again to my new reality. The topics and skills changed at each level while building on the experiences of the past. Throughout all phases of my life, I've sought to be the absolute best I can be, because I knew the price of failure was likely my own or someone else's death. No pressure, eh?

So how does my training regimen relate to civilian CCW holders and home defenders? Well, frankly, today I'm a civilian, but I still know the price of failure hasn't changed. So how do we not fail? First, be honest with yourself. You don't know what you don't know. And if you haven't received solid training from a reliable source, there's a whole lot you don't know! There's nothing "natural" or "instinctive" to shooting a firearm. It's learned behavior, and if you're serious about protecting yourself and those you love, you have to train and learn. As a friend of mine says, it's only life or death!

How do we know what we need? Well, start at the beginning. Your basic CCW training class only teaches you the legal aspects of carrying concealed and allows you to prove you know where the bullet goes in and where it goes out. That's not adequate when lives are at stake. So, start your training with classes that develop the five steps of good shot placement:

- Stance
- Grip
- Sight alignment
- Trigger press
- Follow through

From there, target skills directly related to the task at hand. Look for classes that present broad spectrum skills related to mindset, legal issues, presentations, movement, use of cover, target discrimination, medical emergencies and equipment selection. That should cover your first hundred or so training hours.

Next come specific tactical skills. Home defense, vehicle defense and active shooter response are a few that come to mind. The classes should be civilian oriented. Going to fantasy training where you dress up like a Navy SEAL or SWAT guy may be fun, but most people don't have the time or money to waste on taticool classes before they have developed needed core skills.

How do you avoid wasting your money? That's a tough one. One man's expert is another man's fool. Excellent instructors and institutions present excellent training. Unfortunately, the vast majority of people in the training business are posers. The bad part is that they actually think they know something!

To evaluate an instructor/class, look at the instructor's resume. Look for someone who has spent a significant part of his life as a real world operator in the realm of police/military special operations. SWAT, Rangers, SEALS, Army Special Operations, Street Crime Enforcement and fugitive apprehension are just a few of the job titles that may indicate an individual has the needed core skills and knowledge. Someone with a long list of training classes attended and impressive sounding groups they have "trained" or "trained with," without a significant operational background, can be a red flag.

How do you know something is worthwhile if you haven't experienced it first hand? An instructor has to be intimately familiar with the topic, and that means he/she has to have lived it. I have heard a lot of instructors say real world experience isn't necessary. That's usually pronounced by someone without real world experience. Go figure.

Next comes the class itself. How long is the class and how much information is the instructor pushing out?

I have seen one-day classes that supposedly take a student from “the bullet goes in here and comes out there” to multi-person, live-fire building entries in one day. Folks, in plain English, that’s crap. You cannot “learn” that much information in a month, much less a day. A good class will limit the amount of information to a reasonable level that can be absorbed and experienced in the given amount of time, whether that’s a single- or multi-day class. If you overload the brain, you won’t actually learn anything. Take small bites, take it home and perfect the skill(s), then add to the toolbox in the next level of training.

The last point I want to make is the need to be a good student. Let’s say you’ve done your homework on the instructor and class. You’ve paid your money and taken the time to attend the class. Walk in that classroom with an “empty cup.” Don’t be that guy who constantly has something to say about “the way I do it is...” Nobody paid to hear what you have to say. You should come with the expectation of learning something your chosen instructor has to teach. Let go of your opinions and do what the instructor tells you to do, the way he tells you to do it, when he tells you to do it. That’s the only way you can make a serious evaluation of the instructor and class. You may take a little, a lot, or nothing at all from the class, but you will never know what there is to take away from the class if you are not a willing participant in the class. Be a good student.

Remember, it’s only life or death. If you’re not training, your chances of effectively managing a life-and-death situation are virtually non-existent. Today is the day to start training. GDTM

Having great gear makes any trip to the range more enjoyable and worthwhile. Here are 15 accessories to help get the most out of your time at the range.

DREW WARDEN

Essential Range Gear

Spending time at the range is a vital aspect of developing one's shooting abilities. Whether you're focused on competition, personal defense, or simply plinking, there is no better way to improve marksmanship than hands-on experience with a given firearm.

Of course, a firearm and ammunition to feed it aren't the only tools needed at the range. There are a host of other accessories that are essential for any range trip. These items shouldn't be overlooked when planning to shoot: ear and eye protection, targets, a shooting rest and gun care tools.

In addition, there are also plenty of accessories that—while not strictly essential—do help maximize range time and make it more enjoyable. A chronograph, for example, allows the shooter to have a better understanding of each load's abilities and limitations. Similarly, paper targets are all that's truly needed for training with a pistol or rifle, but the thrill of seeing or hearing a reactive target after a successful hit is much more engaging than punching holes in paper, especially for new or novice shooters.

Fortunately, manufacturers have developed tons of great range accessories to help shooters, regardless of their chosen discipline or level of skill. These vary from fundamental safety gear and firearm maintenance tools to sophisticated measuring equipment and fun, reactive targets. Here is a look at some excellent products to make any trip to the range more rewarding.

Improving on the original Lead Sled, the Lead Sled Plus offers a solid shooting platform that reduces felt recoil up to 95 percent. The rest, which can be purchased from Brownells (Brownells.com), has a precision elevation shaft that removes any play in front elevation and features fingertip adjustments. A new universal weight tray accommodates various weight types, including 25-pound bar bell weights, sand bags or lead shot bags. The Lead Sled Plus comes with a filled front bag for the rifle's fore-end, a padded rear rest for the stock and rubber feet that won't scratch or mar surfaces, making it a useful rest for a variety of conditions. ($119, Brownells.com)

2. BROWNELLS 20-ROUND AR .308 MAGAZINES

Built to the same quality standards as Brownells' AR-15/M16 magazines, these .308 offerings feature a newly designed follower that keeps even pressure on the stack of cartridges throughout the entire feed path. The new magazines are designed specifically for DPMS LR-308 and Knight's SR-25-style rifles and utilize a stainless steel spring and a removable aluminum floorplate. Ruggedly designed, these 20-round .308 AR magazines feature a durable, heat-treated aluminum construction and an anti-corrosion hard-anodized finish. ($19.99; Brownells.com)

3. COMPETITION ELECTRONICS PROCHRONO PAL

An excellent tool for any range trip, the ProChrono Pal digital chronograph accurately measures the velocity of almost any load.

It features a simple setup process and provides a fairly large shooting area, making it a good choice for nearly any shooter. The ProChrono Pal, available from Brownells (Brownells.com), has a memory capacity of 99 shots and allows the user to review the number of shots taken, average velocity and high and low velocities. The device runs on one 9 Volt alkaline battery and can be customized with optional accessories to meet different needs. ($100; Brownells.com)

Pairing a modular design with top-class reliability, the new MCX is ready for anything.

Mission-Adaptable Masterpiece

Over the past few years, SIG Sauer has solidified and expanded its presence in the firearm industry as a top manufacturer. The company has grown into new areas, entering the ammunition sector with its Elite Performance ammo, suppressors with its SRD silencers, and optics with its new Electro-Optics line. SIG has also continued to research, develop and produce firearms that are both reliable and highly innovative. Several of the newly developed products qualify as truly revolutionary, including SIG's newest offering, the MCX.

Formally introduced ahead of the 2015 SHOT Show in Las Vegas, the MCX was built to be a compact and lightweight, close-quarters battle (CQB) suppressed rifle optimized for the .300 AAC Blackout cartridge. Additional requirements for the platform included a modular design with a quick-change barrel system for easy interchangeability of calibers and barrel lengths, traditional AR-style controls for ease of use, the ability to utilize a folding stock, and a gas system that provided unparalleled reliability. In early 2015, SIG commercially released the MCX and made it available in three variations—a semi-auto rifle, a short-barreled rifle (SBR) and a pistol configuration.

With a weight hovering around 6 pounds for all three variants and an overall length of 35.75 inches for the rifle (28.75 inches and 26.625 inches for the SBR and pistol versions, respectively), the engineers at SIG excelled in the “compact” and “lightweight” categories. What's more impressive, however, is that the company was able to meet all the other design goals as well.

Naturally, reaching these objectives doesn't happen overnight. The MCX is the result of a rigorous development process on the part of SIG engineers.

"It was at least a 3- to 3½-year development that we've been working on the gun full time," SIG Sauer rifle manager John Brasseur said. "We had probably about a year's worth of tossing around what the spec was and nailing that down—exactly what would satisfy the customer and what they were looking for. Then it was 3 to 3½ years non-stop—conducting an engineering analysis and making a prototype, testing it and verifying it and going back and forth."

Multiple Calibers, Multiple Configurations

One of the most impressive features of the MCX is its modularity. In addition to the .300 BLK it is primarily designed for, the MCX can easily configure to chamber and fire 5.56 NATO/.223 Rem. and the Soviet 7.62x39mm. The MCX features a lightweight aluminum KeyMod handguard that removes easily to reveal a simple, quick-change barrel system that consists of two bolts holding the barrel in place. One of the bolts helps push the barrel into the receiver, while the other tightens for a sure fit.

Alternating between .300 BLK and 5.56 NATO/.223 Rem. is as easy as swapping out barrels and the included operating rods; transitioning to 7.62x39mm adds a simple bolt face change to the process. The op rods are designed to adjust the positioning of the gas block to ensure reliable performance with the given cartridge.

The 5.56 NATO and 7.62x39mm op rods create a piston system that has a length similar to a carbine-length gas system in standard ARs, while the .300 BLK op rod produces a length similar to a pistol-length gas system, which is necessary for subsonic loads. Barrel twists are 1:6 inches for the .300 BLK, 1:7 for the 5.56 NATO, and 1:9.5 for the 7.62x39mm.

The MCX rifle reviewed for the magazine came with a long KeyMod handguard, but this can be replaced with a shorter variant, or a suppressor-width option if the user chooses. The short KeyMod handguard comes standard on SBR and pistol variants, while the suppressor-width option places the silencer inside as opposed to forward of the handguard. A carbon fiber choice is also listed on SIG Sauer's website.

Because of its design requirement to utilize a folding stock, SIG's engineers had to remove the buffer tube found on traditional ARs. To accomplish this, they developed a unique recoil assembly that places the recoil springs above the bolt carrier group (BCG). While this system offers other benefits, such as an altered recoil impulse and increased durability, it also removes the restriction of using a buffer-tube-style stock. SIG is offering several different options, but the rifle reviewed for the magazine came equipped with the company's low profile, skeletonized SAS folding stock, which is standard on the rifle version of the MCX.

A 16-inch or 9-inch barrel is available on factory models, with the rifle version utilizing the 16-inch barrel and the SBR and pistol variants featuring the 9-inch barrel. However, Brasseur said SIG will also likely offer 6¾-, 11- and 14-inch barrels as aftermarket options. There are also two different color options, black and Flat Dark Earth (FDE).

"I think we went through one day and we did all the different variations that we could do," Brasseur said. "Just with the MCX we were over 250, I think, by the time we got done."

With the exception of the absent buffer tube, the MCX lower is basically identical to a standard Mil-Spec lower, which means users can replace SIG's proprietary pistol grip or the Mil-Spec trigger as their preference dictates. Because it uses a Mil-Spec lower, shooters can also transfer their MCX upper to any standard AR lower and convert it to an MCX with the help of a SIG MCX Stock Kit.

Any Load, Any Way

The MCX is certainly remarkable, but modularity means nothing if the firearm isn't reliable across the different configurations. One of the biggest challenges for SIG's engineers during the development of the MCX was creating a gas system that could not only handle .300 BLK, 5.56 NATO and 7.62x39mm, but also perform when firing super and subsonic loads from a variety of different barrel lengths, and with or without a suppressor.

"Those variations in barrel length and caliber create huge issues for gas systems and consistency with different ammos—never mind when you go suppressed and unsuppressed," Brasseur said. "Creating a gas system that was robust and would function with all ammos with and without a silencer, in multiple barrel lengths, was a feat in itself."

To produce such a system, the engineers at SIG used various high-level modeling systems to essentially "map out" the pressures going down and also out of the barrel, as well as the energy needed to reliably cycle each round.

"We would do pressure testing on high-impulse rounds and low-impulse rounds and get different pressure curves for the different ammunitions down the barrel," Brasseur said. "And then [we] were able to take that map and apply that to the gas system and see dynamically what was happening and if it would function the gun."

The result of all this testing and development is the gas-operated, short-stroke piston system that makes the MCX so unique, and so reliable with any load. Of course, there are other factors that contribute to long-term reliability and durability. On a rifle such as the MCX, which was required to have an upper receiver that could fire up to 50,000 rounds before failure, it is important for parts to last. The best way to ensure this is to use robust parts that can handle lots of abuse. For this reason, SIG used a replaceable steel cam-path insert instead of the traditional aluminum one to avoid excessive wear. The charging handle latches move over steel pins as opposed to aluminum pins, and the interchangeable feed ramp insert is also made of steel. In addition, all of these parts—along with the forward assist—are replaceable for easy repair.

Barrels for the SIG Sauer MCX are hammer forged and receive a nitride treatment for increased barrel life. The MCX also utilizes a fully locked and closed rotating bolt system with a bolt and carrier that have a Nickel Boron coating for enhanced durability.

Range Tested

The MCX was tested with four different loads. Two of these were supersonic loads; two were subsonic. Accuracy testing was conducted at 100 yards from a bench using a Caldwell Matrix rest. Accuracy was measured on four different five-shot groups for each load, and velocity was measured with a Competition Electronics ProChrono chronograph from Brownells. For short-range target shooting, an Aimpoint ACO and MCX factory-installed, flip-up iron sights were used. For accuracy testing, a Nightforce Competition 15-55x52mm scope was utilized.

Of the loads tested, the SIG Sauer 125-grain Elite Performance super-sonic load produced the best accuracy, with an average group of 1.59 inches and a best group of 1.01 inches. The Hornady 110-grain V-MAX supersonic load yielded the best single group overall at 1 inch. Average velocity with the supersonic Elite Performance was 2,189 fps with a standard deviation of 17 fps and an extreme spread of 39 fps. The V-MAX was the fastest, producing an average velocity of 2,369 fps with a standard deviation of 19 fps and an extreme spread of 48 fps.

Parting Shots

The SIG Sauer MCX is without question one of the most adaptable and customizable firearms currently available. It promises shooters the ability to easily transition between three different popular cartridges using supersonic or subsonic loads—with or without a suppressor—and it has an innovative and reliable gas-piston system that makes all of these things possible. The MCX is primed for user-customization, with ample optics options available courtesy of 17¾ inches of available rail space up top, a Key-Mod handguard for accessories, and several unique folding and expanding stock options from SIG. The MCX is a modular, multi-caliber weapon platform that users can transform into whatever they need it to be, and at a price of $1,866, it is also reasonably attainable for many shooters. GDTM

Essential Reloading Gear

PHILLIP MASSARO

When you take the plunge and decide to reload your own ammunition, there are several must-have pieces of gear. The basic process requires that we properly reshape the brass, knock out the spent primer, install a new one, charge the case with powder, and properly seat a bullet in the case. This requires some specialized tools, which will allow us to make safe and effective ammunition. Here are some of the essentials.

A Reloading Press

This machine generates the mechanical advantage needed to squeeze the brass case back into shape in the resizing die and press a new bullet into the resized case. I have a few favorites, including the Redding T7 (left) turret press and the RCBS Summit. The Redding T7 is a turret press, meaning that the head of the press may be rotated, and will hold several dies at once. The T7 has seven threaded holes and maintains very tight tolerances. It shows its value when you need to switch between sizing and flaring dies, or sizing and seating. While a bit pricier than a single-stage press, to me it's well worth the investment. The RCBS Summit press is a newer design that leaves the case stationary and lowers the die onto it. Sporting a huge 2-inch diameter ram with a zerk fitting, the Summit makes very consistent ammo.

A Good Balance Beam Scale

Measuring the weight of your powder charge, bullets or cases is a must. I like the RCBS 505 scale and the Redding No. 2 scale. Both will measure just over 500 grains and give the precision needed to make accurate ammunition. I own two 505s and love them, yet the Redding No. 2 is a tool you'll hand down to your grandkids, and they will hand it to theirs. It's built to last. Even if you end up embracing digital scale technology, I'd strongly recommend you keep at least one balance beam scale on your bench. After all, gravity never wears out.

Reloading Dies

These little wonders are the precision dimensioned tools that control the shape of our brass cases and determine the positioning of the bullets within the case. I use many brands of reloading dies, yet Redding is my favorite. As a great value I'd recommend the Redding Premium Die Set, as it provides both full-length and neck sizing dies, as well as Redding's fantastic micrometer-adjustable bullet seater die.

Case Trimmer

As brass cases are fired, the brass tends to flow forward, and the case will stretch. Therefore, we must be able to trim the case back to its proper length. For years, I used hand-trimming tools, but I have since experienced the joys of electric motor-driven trimmers. The RCBS Trim Pro Power case trimmer will allow you to accurately trim your brass while saving your wrists. A hardened steel cutter head and low-rpm motor will give a good, square case mouth, and do it quickly. It comes with four popular shell holders and nine different caliber pilots.

Case Preparation Tools

There are tools to put a proper chamfer on the inside of your case mouth, to deburr the outside of the case mouth, to clean the primer pocket and to make a uniform flash hole diameter. To reload ammunition, we must use all of these. Lyman has produced a kit that contains all you'll need. Lyman's Ultimate Case Prep Kit has all of the above tools, plus large and small primer pocket reamers for removing the military primer crimp, so you may reload military brass. Lyman also includes different diameter case brushes for cleaning the case necks and an inertia hammer for pulling loaded cartridges apart. You may, of course, purchase these items separately, and some come as combination tools, such as the Wilson chamfer/deburring tool.

A Reloading Manual

These hallowed tomes are the cookbooks that tell us reloaders how much of which powder to put in which case when using which bullet. It can seem confusing at first, looking at all those combinations, but you'll get the hang of it before long. I like to hold a book in my hand, but will confess to using many of the online loading data tables that are available from the different manufacturers. In this day and age of radically new bullet designs, many of the reloading manuals are specific to the bullet that is tested, i.e., an all-copper bullet will have different load data than will a cup-and-core bullet due to the difference in bearing surface and the pressures generated by the different designs. If you intend to load more than one type of bullet, odds are you'll end up owning several different manuals, and that's not a bad thing. If you're looking for a good, all-around manual that tests many different brands of bullets, look to the Lyman No. 49 Reloading Manual. I collect reloading data and I actually enjoy reading the cartridge histories and residual information provided in them, so I don't mind owning many of them.

Powder Dispensers

I've used just about every conceivable means of dispensing powder, from a cardboard box or a Yankee Candle glass cover and a plastic scoop to the Redding LR-1000 powder thrower, to the RCBS ChargeMaster 1500 Combo, which is fully automated, using a high-quality digital scale. While all of them have worked well, I definitely prefer the classier means of dispensing powder.

The RCBS ChargeMaster 1500 Combo makes for quick and easy work. The powder is stored in a hopper and a keypad is used to enter the charge weight. That amount of powder is then dispensed via a tube threaded on the inside like a worm screw into a digital scale which is interfaced with the unit. The trickle function will deliver small amounts of powder should you need to fine-tune the load, but that doesn't happen to me often. If you prefer the non-computerized devices, a powder dispenser like the Redding LR-1000 will deliver a pre-measured amount of powder when the crank is turned, and that volume is micrometer adjustable. You'll also need a powder trickler to get the powder load just so when you measure it in your scale.

A Bullet Puller

Hey, we all make mistakes. That's why they put erasers on pencils, right? If you seat a bullet too deep, forget to install a primer or forget to put powder in the case, you can pull that cartridge apart and reuse the components. There are essentially two types: the inertia hammer and a collet-type, press-mounted puller. The inertia hammer uses a screw cap at the rear of the hammer to hold the cartridge by the rim or case head. Upon beating the hammer on a block of wood, the case stays put in the screw cap while the bullet is slowly forced out of the case. I've found this method will sometimes damage the meplat of the bullet. The press-mounted puller uses a collet of specific caliber to dismantle the cartridge. With the cartridge in the shellholder of the press, it is raised upward so the bullet slides into the collet. The collet is then tightened around the bullet, and when the press ram is lowered, the case is pulled away from the bullet. Easy peasy. GDTM

SIG Sauer's P516 is a world-class AR pistol well-suited for home defense

Compact Close-Quarter Hitter

The weapon you choose to defend your home must be maneuverable, compact, simple to use for you and your household members, and it must provide the necessary firepower to stop an intruder. AR pistols are just that type of weapon for home defense, and the SIG P516 pistol with the SB15 Pistol Stabilizing Brace is the type of weapon designed for close-range maneuvering. The SIG P516 has a hard earned reputation among military and law enforcement personnel in the U.S. and around the world as a reliable, capable firearm. The P516 is based off the SIG 516 rifle, which is built on an AR-15-type platform with a refined operating system that is combat-reliable. Instead of the traditional direct-impingement gas system found on a standard AR-type platform, the 516 series—both the rifle and the pistol—use a short-stroke, gas-piston/pushrod operating system. This piston system ensures that carbon fouling and excess heat never reach the chamber or bolt carrier.

In turn, this significantly improves the weapon's functionality. There is minimal heat to dry out oil or gunk from burning gases.

All About That Gas

This operating system also uses a four-position gas valve that allows a user to adjust the gas in one of four positions. Position No. 1 provides normal gas flow to operate the P516. Position No. 2 allows extra gas flow for adverse situations, such as when the weapon is fouled and short stroking. Position No. 3 reduces gas flow to enhance suppressor use, and position No. 4 turns off the gas value for optimized suppression and makes the P516 function as a single-shot pistol. Most users will keep the gas value in position No. 1, but it is useful that SIG's engineers allowed the value to be adjusted for numerous scenarios and circumstances. Practically useful, the valve can also be adjusted using the tip of a cartridge.

When it comes down to it, an AR pistol is a compromise that spans the gap between a typical 16-inch-barreled AR-type rifle and an AR-type Short Barreled Rifle (SBR). The difference between the 16-inch AR-type variant and the SBR, other than the barrel length, is the paperwork required to legally own an SBR. This includes an ATF Form 1, local law enforcement approval and the purchase of a $200 tax stamp. The "AR pistol" designation allows gun owners to avoid the additional paperwork while maintaining a shorter barrel. The compromise, of course, is the absence of a butt stock. The solution to that problem, if you can call it that, is the SB15 brace. The SIG P516 with the SB15 brace makes the pistol easier to control. It's certainly not the rock-steady hold of a butt stock, but it's steadier than the typical handgun hold.

The P516 is built with forged 7075-T6 aluminum upper and lower receiver

ers with a hard coat anodized finish. The upper features a free-floated, military-grade, nitride-treated, 10-inch barrel with a twist rate of 1:7 inches with six grooves. At the muzzle is an A2-style flash hider. When decreasing the length of barrel in the AR-type platform, having adequate gas to operate the system is an engineering challenge. After speaking with a SIG spokesperson, they agreed it was a challenge, and that is why the short-stroke system is used.

"The P516 requires a bit more gas than the SIG 516 to run reliably since there is less recoil mitigation when compared to a stocked rifle," according to SIG. "So the gas port is larger on the P516, and since it enhances reliability on SBRs, the SIG 516 SBR also runs the same gas port."

SIG's short-stroke gas pushrod system also makes SBRs and P516s run more reliably than a direct-impingement gun. This becomes magnified once the barrels become 11 inches or shorter. So, if you're looking for the most reliability out of a SBR or an AR pistol, you really should be looking at a short-stroke gas pushrod system.

The barrel and the short-stroke piston system are then sheathed in an aluminum quad-rail handguard. The quad rail allows a user to mount accessories, and in the case of a homeowner there is plenty of rail space for a tactical light. Ergo rubber rail covers are included with the pistol, so the unused quad rails are more comfortable to hold and less abrasive. The topside is a true 1913 Picatinny rail that runs from the very rear of the upper to the adjustable gas valve, giving the user plenty of mounting options for optics.

A red dot or reflex sight is a natural choice for close-up work in a room or down a hallway. Adjustable flip-up iron sights snap upright into position, then fold back away from the muzzle. They deploy in seconds. The rear sight offers two aperture sizes and is adjustable for windage, while the front post sight is protected by wings and is adjustable for elevation. I found the iron sights perfectly adjusted for 25 yards. I mounted a Mepro Tru-Dot RDS with a 1.8 MOA red dot reticle, which offers rapid target acquisition with both eyes open through a large viewing window. The RDS is a commercial version of similar sights used by Israeli Defense Forces.

Constructed with an aluminum body and tough polymer frame, the RDS runs on a single AA battery, providing thousands of operating hours, plus it features an automatic shut off to conserve power. The reticle has four brightness settings: three for day/night use and one for use with night vision gear and magnifiers. The unit features an integral Picatinny rail mount with QD levers, and when mounted, it perfectly co-witnesses with the flip-up iron sights. At 10.5 ounces, it is lightweight and only takes up 4.5 inches of rail space.

The lowers on the SIG 516, SIG 516 SBR and P516 are identical. There is no difference other than the lack of stock on the pistol. The P516 features an ambidextrous selec-

A Range Near You

Looking for a place to go shoot?
The NSSF has an online and mobile resource to help.

DREW WARDEN

As many shooters know, an important aspect of gun ownership is regularly getting out and spending time shooting. The most effective method of growing shooting sports is to get new and young shooters involved. The best—and perhaps the only—way of accomplishing this is to get them out at the range.

A range session is an enjoyable and necessary experience for any shooter regardless of skill level. Range trips help educate and familiarize new shooters with firearm safety and shooting basics, and they serve as valuable training time for more seasoned shooters.

Unfortunately, while trips to the shooting range are the primary building blocks for any shooter's development, finding and accessing ranges isn't always easy. Shooters living in rural areas may have the benefit of shooting on their own private land or that of a friend. Many new shooters, especially those in urban areas, simply don't have that luxury.

The National Shooting Sports Foundation (NSSF), the trade association for the firearms industry, has helped shooters solve this problem by creating a comprehensive, searchable directory (WhereToShoot.org) that lists places to shoot. Available as an online guide or downloadable as an app for Apple and Android smartphones, the directory is expansive and offers shooters many great resources.

Where to Shoot

Designed to be quick and simple to use, the NSSF's "Where to Shoot" directory provides a few different options for finding the right place to shoot. The user can view listings by state or search the directory by inputting a zip code and a distance parameter ranging from 5 miles up to 120 miles.

These are the only two ways to find shooting areas on the mobile app; however, the online directory can filter results even further based on several other factors.

One of these filtering options is "shooting activities," which allows the user to select ranges based on the type of activities they offer. These include shotgun events such as trap and skeet, centerfire or rimfire rifle shooting, and handgun shooting, among others. Whether the ranges have dedicated archery or airgun areas can similarly be used to limit results.

Choices can also be filtered by what kind of competitions and organized events the range hosts, or even by what type of services are available (retail store, food service, camper/RV sites, etc.). Likewise, those looking for hunting opportunities can find them by choosing among several different types of game animals they'd like to pursue.

This level of detail allows shooters to find the location that fits their exact needs and desires, and which will hopefully translate into continued or even expanded participation in the shooting sports.

One-Stop Shop

A guide to finding ranges is an excellent tool for shooters, but the NSSF doesn't stop there. In addition to helping users locate shooting areas, the online directory offers an assortment of useful tips and tools, especially for novice shooters.

Under a separate tab on the Where to Shoot homepage titled "Resources," the NSSF provides links to several educational guides and a host of informative sources. There are links to the NSSF's YouTube channel, where users can find instructional videos on shooting tips and tactics, and to the NSSF blog, where shooters can view the latest industry news and trends.

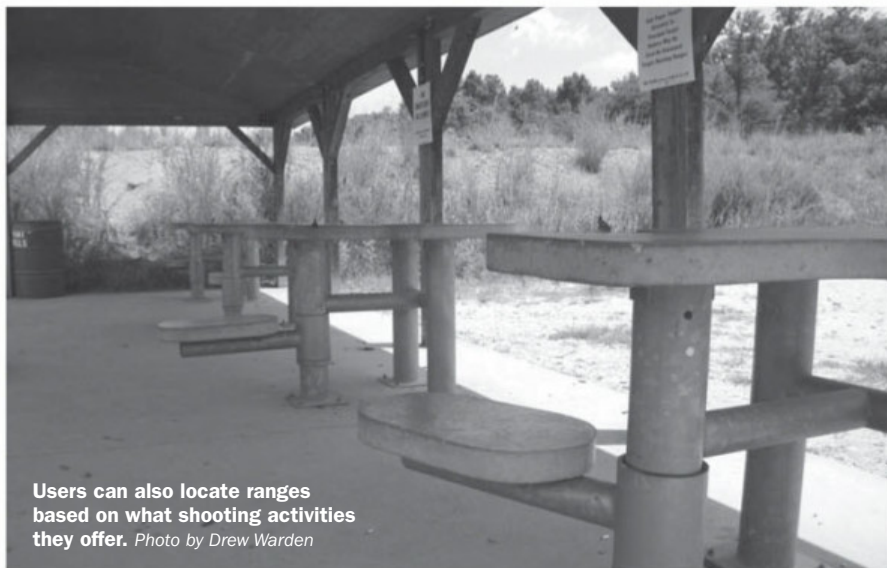

Particularly helpful to first-time gun owners and shooters, the resources tab also contains links to the rules of firearm safety and other firearm safety literature. Printable paper targets ranging from deer and turkey to standard bullseyes are available as well, giving shooters a leg up as they make their way to the range.

The site's resources section includes an extensive catalog of youth and college shooting sports programs and a page that details the various competitive shooting sports. It also features a list of other organizations for shooters and provides information on NSSF First Shots seminars, introductory courses where shooters learn the basics of safe firearm handling and use, receive guidance on local requirements for purchasing and owning firearms and hear about different shooting sports opportunities. Last but not least, the site allows shooters to search for firearm retailers by state.

A Go-To Resource

With an extensive directory of shooting ranges and clubs that is regularly updated and available online or on most smartphones, NSSF's Where to Shoot is a valuable tool for both novice and veteran shooters. The user-friendly design allows shooters to quickly and easily find nearby ranges, leaving them with more time to actually shoot and acquire proficiency with a chosen firearm.

The Where to Shoot website is a wellspring of useful information, especially for new or youth shooters just beginning their shooting careers. Whether the shooter is looking to simply improve marksmanship abilities or get started in competitive shooting, the NSSF's online guide has abundant information to help. With its Where to Shoot website and mobile app, the NSSF has created a powerful, easy-to-use resource located literally at a shooter's fingertips or in the palm of their hands. GDTM

SUPPRESSORS FOR HOME DEFENSE

The muzzle blast from a 16-inch-barreled AR-15 is noticeable; out of a 10-inch barrel like the one found in the P516, the blast is even closer to the user. I imagine in the confines of a small room the sound and force must sound and feel like fury unleashed. Some shooters have an aversion to the .223 round not so much for the recoil but for the muzzle blast a 60-grain bullet leaving a barrel at 2,700 fps is going to create. One of the jobs a suppressor can do is reduce muzzle blast. Buying a can adds weight and length to an AR pistol, plus there is the required paperwork and $200 tax stamp, but that might be the trade-off. The SIG SRD556-QD offers reduction in sound and muzzle blast, so a sensitive or experienced shooter is less affected by the blast and can better concentrate on shot placement. The SRD556-QD offers a quick-detach interface and is available in steel or titanium construction. The Dead-Air 7.62 Sandman-S (the “S” stands for Short) offers easy attachment and detachment and is constructed using heat-treated stainless steel. The Delta P Design BREVIS II is a lightweight suppressor that offers reduced sound and visual signature in a stubby can that is only 3.7 inches in length.

tor and magazine release, making the P516 more versatile and faster to operate regardless of whether you are right- or left-handed. The Phase 5 extension tube is fitted with SIG’s SB15 pistol stabilizing brace. The brace is shaped like a clamp and made of a rigid yet flexible rubber similar to that used in swim fins and diving mask material. The operator’s shooting arm is inserted into the brace, and an attached hook-and-loop strap secures the weapon to the user’s forearm. A second strap can also be used to more securely attach the weapon to the shooter’s arm. The brace is easily removed or installed by pulling it off or sliding it onto the buffer tube. The SIG P516 can be used with or without the brace. The pistol grip is SIG’s proprietary pistol grip with an ample texture and an arched back-strap. It is very comfortable to hold. The single-stage trigger pull measured on average 7.6 pounds but felt lighter. There was a slightly perceptible bit of creep but not enough to interfere. This is a defense weapon, after all, and not a target pistol.

At the range, my assumption was that the P516 would not be as accurate as a typical 16-inch barrel variant. I was wrong. Using a rest, I was able to average ½-inch groups or better at 25 yards with five shots using 55-, 62- and 77-grain ammo. The P516 is a shooter. It particularly liked the new Norma USA 77-grain Sierra MK HPBT ammo and the new Barnes VOR-TX all-copper 55-grain TSX FS bullet. Even the economical Fiocchi 55-grain FMJ BT performed well.

The new HPR Black Ops OTF uses a 62-grain Open Tip Frangible bullet that is specifically designed for home defense and offers less over penetration. Going to off-hand shooting, I found the brace helped provide more stable shooting. Don't get me wrong, this is a pistol with a 10-inch barrel that weighs 6.5 pounds, and holding at arms length gets tiring fast. Firing for speed from the hip, the SB15 brace kept the P516 steady.

Removing the SB15 brace, I also attached a Blackhawk one-point Storm Sling to the P516 via a Magpul QDM sling swivel. The P516 has a built-in sling-swivel mount on each side of the lower. With the sling over one shoulder and across my chest, I pushed the pistol out from my body, and the sling provided a more steady set up. Holding the P516 in two hands, the pistol was easy to manipulate and hold steady. I liked shooting the P516 with both the red dot and iron sights. With either the SB15 brace or a one-point sling, you give yourself an edge with a more solid hold. With no snags and excellent accuracy, the P516 offers everything you need when picking up a weapon in haste to defend your home.

Other than the AR pistol itself, considerations for home defense include choosing the right ammunition and, where legal, a suppressor. Suppressors can greatly reduce the noise from discharged rounds in confined spaces, thus protecting your hearing. As always, it's important to check the laws in your state and make the best decision for you and your family. GDTM

.223 HOME DEFENSE AMMO

Over-penetration is a concern with a home defense weapon no matter what the caliber. When using the .223 for home defense, leave the FMJs for range work. These bullets are designed to punch holes in flesh, steel, wood or nearly any material that is in its trajectory. Bullet technology has evolved in recent years. Now there are bullets that break apart when they strike drywall or wood, and when they hit flesh, they do no over-penetrates, instead transferring most of the energy into the home invader. HPR Ammunition's Black Ops OTF is designed for law enforcement and home defense. Using a 62-grain Open Tip Frangible bullet, it is designed to create massive force trauma in soft targets, while breaking on impact on hard targets. The P516 achieved excellent accuracy with HPR's Black Ops OTF. Other loads suitable for home defense include Hornady TAP FDP Personal Defense Ammunition and Winchester PDX1 Defender Self Defense ammo. The Hornady TAP FDP is designed to cause dramatic wound cavities while reducing the risk of over penetration. The cases are also nickel plated for optimal reliability. The Winchester PDX1 60-grain bullet uses Split Core Technology (SCT) that features a quick-expanding front lead core and deep-driving bonded rear lead core.

Julia's Announces Their New "Sporting and Collector Firearms Auction" Session October 5th, 2015

Over the years, Julia's has established themselves as the premiere auctioneer in the world for high-end expensive firearms. In fact, Julia's consistently sells more high-end, expensive firearms than any other auction firm on the planet Earth. However for years there has been a significant amount of requests to incorporate moderate priced firearms within our auctions. Now, beginning with our October 5th, 2015 auction, Julia's will feature a special session to offer moderate priced firearms. That session will be referred to as the "Sporting and Collector Firearms Auction" and will feature quality, collectible, moderate priced firearms; usually in the range of $2,000-8,000+. This session will immediately precede our regular auctions which are regularly billed as "Extraordinary Auctions of Rare and Historical Firearms". Beginning with our October 2015 sale, we will present a 3-day auction. October 5th will consist of the "Sporting and Collector Firearms" session and October 6th & 7th will be our "Extraordinary Auction of Rare and Historical Firearms" session. Our first "Sporting and Collector Auction" will include a fabulous selection of desirable firearms including a large offering of Sporting Arms, Winchester, Colts, Civil War, Military and more. Numerous collections will include a portion of the Collection of the late Philip Bleakney of Antique Handguns, a portion of the famous Rod Fuller Collection of Fine Brownings, a portion of the fabulous Collection of Brownings amassed by Robert Burg, a portion of the Geoffrey Sturgess Collection of Rare Auto loading weapons and much, much more. The October 5th "Sporting and Collector Firearms Auction" session will be featured in a special stand-alone catalog and just as with the "Extraordinary" firearms auction, the "Sporting and Collector Firearms Auction" catalog descriptions will feature expert descriptions and also be covered by our famous Julia guarantee policy unique in the firearms auction world today.

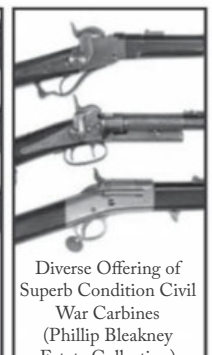

Catalog cover for our New October 5th "Sporting and Collector Firearms Auction" which will feature firearms in the range of $2,000-$8,000 plus. This sale will be held immediately preceding our October 6th & 7th "Extraordinary Auction of Rare and Historic Firearms"

12. STARKEY HEARING TECHNOLOGIES SOUNDGEAR

Hearing protection is an absolute necessity for any training or plinking session, but many shooters don't like being unable to converse with other shooters while at the range. The electronic hearing protection offered by Starkey Hearing Technologies allows the shooter to get the best of both worlds—noise enhancement for sounds below 93dB and noise reduction for sounds above that mark. SoundGear offers 25dB of noise reduction and fits comfortably inside the ear canal. The SoundGear In-the-Canal kit comes with one pair of SoundGear digital hearing protection devices, two pairs of both orange and black silicone sleeves, two packs of size 10 batteries and one cleaning brush. The devices come with a 1-year limited warranty. ($399; SoundGearHearing.com)

13. BLACKHAWK DIVERSION RANGE BAG

Any shooter transporting firearms and ammo to the range should have a range bag, and this one from Blackhawk has the added advantage of a subtle design that doesn't draw attention. Designed with the color and form of a common gym bag, the Diversion Range Bag provides ample storage for your shooting gear and accessories without overtly appearing like a range bag. The bag has two end pockets with hidden handgun compartments as well as a larger main compartment that contains adjustable dividers. Two additional pockets provide storage for magazines and gun care supplies. It is available in three different color schemes. ($153; Blackhawk.com)

14. CHAMPION VISICOLOR ZOMBIE TARGETS

Who says paper targets have to be plain or boring? VisiColor Zombie Targets from Champion Target offer a fun, zombie-themed alternative to the standard bullseye targets commonly seen at the range. Featuring clear, movie-quality digital imagery, these targets come in many different options ranging from single and multiple zombies to zombies alongside human hostages and even animal zombies. The paper targets are equipped with Champion's VisiColor technology, which illustrates hits to the target by changes in color. Headshots are revealed with a radiation green color, while hits to the body are illustrated with a fluorescent yellow. Misses, or hits to human hostages, are white. The targets are available in variety six-packs with three different designs or in a larger pack of 50 targets. ($9.49 for six, $51.95 for 50; ChampionTarget.com)

15. BRASS MAGNET

Regardless of whether a shooter reloads, a necessary part of any trip to the range should be picking up spent brass. This could be a short process if the shooter is simply sighting in a gun or shooting a few groups, or it can be a very long, tedious event if many shots have been fired. The Brass Magnet is designed to reduce cleanup time by 75 to 85 percent, regardless how long the range session. Essentially a weighted net that is 8½ feet by 12 feet, the Brass Magnet comes with six convenient weighted handles and Velcro tabs for quickly picking up a large amount of brass cases. It also comes with its own carrying bag for easy transport. ($159.95; BrassMagnet.com) GDTM

Market Trends

New, used, collectible, plus ammunition and accessories—if it's selling and it's hot, we'll tell you about it here.

By BRIAN MCCOMBIE

Surging Interest in Japanese World War II Firearms

John Farkas—Rush2Arms.com, Berea, Ohio (Rush2Arms.com)

Historically, according to John Farkas, owner and lead auctioneer of Rush2Arms.com auction service, U.S. and German firearms from World Wars I and II have topped the list of the most sought-after guns for military collectors. That reality has also steadily driven up the prices of these firearms. World War Two Japanese firearms? Usually a distant third—and often even farther back in the line.

But that's been changing the last couple years, noted Farkas, with a noticeable shift in collector interest, as well as increasing prices being paid.

"10 years ago a Japanese Nambu pistol could be had for $100," he said.

"Today, a Poppa Nambu in good condition will bring in $700. A Baby Nambu with the original holster and other accessories? $7,500. And I have seen them go as high as $10,000 at recent auctions!"

Farkas thought that the higher prices of U.S. and German military arms has collectors, especially new ones, going for the more affordable Japanese options.

Meanwhile, prices for vintage accessories have been rising, too. Leading the pack: original holsters. "I'm amazed at the prices we are getting for original holsters from both wars. Right now, holsters are huge. Collectors are buying up vintage military rifle scopes, too, especially any that were made for sniper rifles."

A Youth Movement In Northern Idaho

Thanks to an increase in local shooting programs, Center Target Sports is seeing definite growth in the youth shooting sports market. The influx of youngsters is also being aided by another trend: more females using the Center Target range facilities.

Local sportsmen's groups and Boy Scout troops hold more and more shooting opportunities for youth. Center Target also offers a youth handgun familiarity class every month that fills fast, plus a youth hunter orientation just before the Idaho hunting season kicks off.

Meanwhile: "More moms are using our shooting range, and they are bringing along their children," said Center Target owner Ed Santos. "The kids discover they like shooting, and we have new customers!"

The moms—and dads—are buying .22 LR firearms for their children. Rugers top the list—the 10/22 for those in need of a rifle, the Ruger SR22 for young handgunners. But the top sellers for the kids? Ear muffs and eye protection, Santos said.

Polymer-Framed Pistols on the Move—Old is "New" For Cali Shooters

Mike Etienne—Turner's Outdoorsman, 18 Locations in Southern California (Turners.com)

At Turner's 18 stores throughout Southern California, big sales in the firearms department are coming from polymer-framed pistols, especially the Smith & Wesson Shield and Springfield XD. The XD Essential model sells right at $449, while the Shield is approximately $20 less.

Only handguns listed on California's "roster" of approved models can be sold in the state, and that does hinder sales; in general, the roster requirement means Cali shooters can't get most new handguns hitting the market.

"Thankfully, companies like Beretta are reviving some of the old handguns they kept on the list and making limited production runs on variants of Beretta 92s," said Mike Etienne, Turner's vice president of purchasing and marketing. "These re-intros create some excitement for our regular customers, giving them some 'new' options of guns to buy."

For long guns, the hot sellers are the AK variants being manufactured by Century Arms, including the RAS47 and the C39V2 models. "We have people coming through the doors daily for those particular rifles," said Etienne. "The prices—just under $1,000 for the C39V2 and just over $800 for the RAS47—and the quality of these rifles are big for recreational shooters. Plus, Century rifles now being made in the USA certainly helps sales, too."

Reloading supplies sales have been flat, mostly because of a lack of gunpowder on the shelves. "But powder has become more available in the last month, so we'll see if things pick up in this category," Etienne said. "Ammo, with the exception of rimfire, is becoming more and more available, and I expect to see prices start to drop soon."

The Youth Trend Part Two: Midwest Kids Like Their Shotguns!

Rex Gore—Black Wing Shooting Center, Delaware, Ohio.

The youth shooting market continues to grow at Black Wing Shooting Center, noted CEO Rex Gore, thanks to youth shooting camps held at the facility that run all summer, as well as more families becoming involved in shooting.

"As far as product, demand for youth-sized shotguns are focused on the few companies that manufacturer reduced-length guns," Gore said. "The Remington 870s and 1100s, the Mossberg 500 and the Franchi AL all offer youth options. On the higher end, since Beretta has exited this market, we have done well with the Fabarms XLR/Syren shotgun, even though it is a $2,500-plus firearm."

Youth rifle purchases are centered on the numerous Ruger 10/22 options. Ruger's new American rifle in .22 LR and .22 Mag. sells well here, also.

"Shooting accessories focus mainly on clothing and gun cases/shooting bags," he added. "We sell several of the manufacturers' logoed cases and bags to go with their purchase. Logoed shooting vests, caps and t-shirts are very popular, also."

Surging Interest in Bolt-Action Long Guns, Including Ruger's Newest Rifle

Shawn Schweigert—H&H Shooting Sports, Oklahoma City, Okla., (HHS ShootingSports.com)

H&H Shooting Sports was among the very first retailer to receive the new Ruger Precision Rifle—Ruger's entry into the long-range and tactical market—and featured the rifle at a July in-store sales and promotional event. H&H promptly sold out of the eight .308-caliber models it had on hand.

"This rifle, in my opinion, is going to take the market by storm this year," predicted Shawn Schweigert, H&H's long guns manager. "It looks to be a hit with the tactical crowd and the hunters we service. That's a very strong combination."

Chambered in .308 Win, 6.5 Creedmoor and .243 Win, the Ruger Precision Rifle looks like a cross between a bolt-gun and an AR platform. For $1,049, shooters get a rifle rated as sub-MOA right out of the box, with an adjustable trigger, Ruger's MSR stock, a 20 MOA Picatinny rail, plus a threaded, suppressor-ready barrel. Schweigert notes that he's sold about half the other caliber Precision Rifles he had and already has a long list for future deliveries of the .308's.

"About half the guys who bought the .308 were looking for a longer range rifle for hunting, one that could take down a big hog," said Schweigert. "Hogs are becoming a real problem in this state, especially in Western Oklahoma."

Predator hunters have been buying the new Howa Varminter, with thumb-hole stock, and the Browning X-Bolt. AR-type rifles are selling, but at very reduced levels from a couple years ago as folks return to traditional bolt-actions. GDTM
